Fuel cells are devices that generate electric energy from an electrochemical reaction of a fuel and an oxidant. In recent years, fuel cells have been drawing attention as a power source of low pollution cars because of higher efficiency and high power. Currently, numerous patent applications are pending on the fuel cell technology including techniques for densifying cell electrode catalyst layers which catalyzes oxygen reduction reaction. For example, Patent Document 1 discloses a fuel cell in which Pt or a Pt alloy is used as the catalyst component of a cathode and Nb-doped SrRuO₃ is used as the catalyst component of an anode. Patent Document 2 discloses a fuel cell in which a carbon support is used as the catalyst component of an anode. The First Generation Guy An Author, Editor, Speaker, Avid Opinionator Conflict is an interesting thing. In high school, I swore by The Inertia because I felt that it was the perfect thing to keep me from trouble. But something about the levels of grilling that I got from my peers that was almost too intense for me to handle. And then I saw Love Actually. If you haven't seen the movie, it's about a man who has just met the love of his life but has to explain that his seemingly perfect wife has a child from a previous marriage. So he breaks it down to the girls in the group (who are all also in a relationship) in a sweet and charming way. They discuss the issues in detail. And while the "conflict" is there, it's handled in a matter that builds the story rather than kills it. I was floored. So yeah, conflict is interesting. There's a time and a place for it. And it's always good to handle it the right way. But it's also scary. And that's where I want to draw a parallel to the world of personal development. Yep, you heard that right. We've all been in situations where it's there. You hear some crazy person making demands on someone and you want to
