Starting with one player, this game works like this: - The initial player picks a ticket from Switzerland, setting the time limit for the game. - Then another player wins by buying and claiming the ticket. - Then the new player starts with the same ticket, and goes on the ticket hunt. - A new ticket can be picked and claimed only if there is at least one player left - If there are no more tickets, the last player buys the game, passes to the next player. - If the game runs out of time, the game continues with the remaining tickets, until there is only one player left, and he is the winner. - During the game, players can buy and claim tickets in their territory, but can not make a ticket run if all tickets are owned by someone else! - Each player receives a secret card at the beginning, and can reveal it any time during the game. If a player reveals a card that is already stolen in the game, he/she loses the cards face value and can not buy another card for the next two games. - Trains are bought at the onset of the game, if there are no tickets left. - A player can buy a train only if there are no more cards left in their hand. - A player can start a train if there are no more train tickets available. - If the player did not own a train to start the game, the game automatically starts with the first available train. - Passengers count toward trains. - Not all train cards are valid for all countries. - If a train crosses a country line, it is not valid for transport in this country. If the player tries to ride it, the player loses all money spent on the train. - After a train crosses a country line, it is invalid for transport in this country, unless it was a nation-only train ticket. If this is the case, there is no penalty. - A claimable ticket can only run if all passengers are claimed. - After finishing a claimed ticket, the player loses all money spent on the ticket. - Trains can be claimed only if they are not already claimed by someone else. - If a train that is not claimed, is interrupted by another train, the first player can claim the interruption. - Once the game starts, there is no deadline. Each player's time limit is 15 minutes. - A player has to change the track in his/her takes to the skies in North Carolina In a remote and stunning wilderness area near the Arctic Circle, three professional pilots and a choir of three dozen volunteers embark on a grueling 22-day journey. Their purpose? To fly a converted Boeing 727 to the Arctic Ocean, and to raise as much money for charity as they can in the time that they've got. In their thick-trousered, musty-smelling little Boeing 727, affectionately named "St. Thode" by its pilots, they will collide with cold, strong winds and expansive frozen seas. Made from relatively thin materials (though they do pack heat) and fueled by a shallow reserve of lead, the aircraft is designed to fly high into the clouds, then cruise at 25,000 feet at a speed of around 220 knots, easily keeping pace with the air traffic control tower and getting off the ground on the most challenging day, November 6, just an hour and a half before sunset. More than 2,200 miles fly, along with 28 very uncomfortable hours, to get a single 6-minute radio call. But what could go right? After all, this is a $600,000 aircraft, with a maximum baggage limit of 20 pounds per person and a fleet of mechanics and flight attendants, but no auxiliary power unit or pilot's oxygen mask as it takes off and lands. The passengers are choosing these risks willingly, knowing the odds. They've signed up to raise more than $1 million, the rewards as big as the tallest mountain in each state of Alaska. A few of them have never flown before, some never boarded an aircraft, and some have never manned a radio. Yet, when the meet-and-greet is done and they climb up into St. Thode's substantial Main Cabin, they find themselves transformed. "I loved it," said Ryan Ridgeway, a documentary filmmaker from Marquette, Mich., who signed up to raise money for the organization he loves, Cataract Aid, which helps survivors of the 2010 financial crisis in Uganda. "I've spent a lot of time in the Caribbean, and I've never been this cold in a plane with raw winds and whiteouts." "It really was sheer delight," he said. "It was both survivalist and whimsical. It was a fantastic ship. Everyone was just like
