Q: Python 2 - Importing CSV file to dictionary I am trying to take a CSV file and make it a dictionary. I have tried doing: df=pd.read_csv('/Users/avc/test.csv', header=None,sep=',') d = df.to_dict() but I get a blank dictionary. When I import my CSV file in python it has a set of dictionary for each row in the first column with the values and the second column is all NaN. Anyone know what's going on? Thanks in advance. A: You should specify the keys in to_dict: import pandas as pd df = pd.read_csv('/Users/avc/test.csv', header=None,sep=',') d = df.to_dict(orient='index') It should return {'a':10, 'b':11, 'c':12} Buy the eBook Synopsis "Here's the first sane look at a future without Americans. You won't be able to read a USA Today without seeing Sean Hannity's face. What passes for news is being manipulated by true believers who act like the rest of us are deluded. People can smell a con in a book, but seldom will." --Thomas Friedman, columnist, New York Times When the American people learn about the fact that the White House will no longer be run by a lunatic, some of them are bound to be a little disappointed. But you don't need to be a scientist to know that the White House is going to be changed somehow. Sure, you can argue about who will be in power and the makeup of the administration. But it's all just a matter of semantics. What's missing from the whole debate is that the American people have a direct hand in the new government, and they are going to get a say in who will lead it. Born in the United States, Jeff Steinhauer's new book Explaining America is an attempt to define a new way to view the place that calls itself home. He has traveled all over the country to find out what people think about the United States and what they want. His findings are illuminating, and you will also hear from a whistle-blower who knows firsthand how little we Americans know about the future of our own country

Development of a ZrP/ZnO-B/CdSe/CdS/CdSe/CdS core/shell/shell/shell quantum dot thin film photovoltaic device. The power conversion efficiency of a ZrP/ZnO-B/CdSe/CdS/CdSe/CdS core/shell/shell/shell quantum dot photovoltaic device using the conventional method depends on high quality of quantum dot colloid, but the conventional colloid preparation method is very complicated. We developed a core/shell/shell/shell quantum dot colloid by a modified sol-gel method. To further improve the power conversion efficiency and biocompatibility of this photovoltaic device, we developed a thick-film photovoltaic device made of a ZrP/ZnO-B/CdSe/CdS/CdSe/CdS core/shell/shell/shell colloidal quantum dot thin film using a screen-printing method. The ZrP/ZnO-B/CdSe/CdS/CdSe/CdS core/shell/shell/shell colloidal quantum dot film quantum dot thin film photovoltaic device produced by the modified sol-gel method has a power conversion efficiency of 1.64%, a short-circuit current density of 9.43 mA cm(-2) and a fill factor of 0.84. In this study, we observed a problem related to the formation of delocalized polaron transport states as a result of an effective interdot exciton diffusion through the expanded energy gap of the colloidal quantum dot thin film. This problem was overcome by developing a thick-film quantum dot photovoltaic device. The power conversion efficiency of the thick-film device was 1.8%, which was about 1.3 times higher than that of the thin film device.namespace Microsoft.SqlServer.ConnectionStrings { using System.Web.Configuration; using System.Web.Hosting; using SQL; using static System.Web.Hosting; /// /// SQL and web connection string factory for the Web Host and Classic Mode. ///
